UNIQUES	The multicultural neighbourhoods
Surprising	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- Yonge Street, Toronto's main street, is the longest street in the world at 1,900 km. It stretches from the lake at Queens Quay in Toronto to Rainy River, a mining community in northern Ontario, near Thunder Bay.</li> <li>- the Bata Shoe Museum</li> <li>- the wonderfully hidden ravine systems that run towards the lake</li> </ul>
History	The area was used as a meeting place for centuries by people of the First Nations and, later, by French traders, thanks to its naturally protected harbour. In 1788, the British purchased the land from the Mississauga Indians, and a settlement slowly established itself around the waterfront area. In 1793, Lieutenant-Colonel John Graves Simcoe established a military garrison and named the town York in honour of the Duke of York of the time. It was renamed Toronto when the city was incorporated in 1834. During the War of 1812, the town was twice occupied by the Americans (both times in 1813). By 1834, its citizens – mostly British and Scottish immigrants – numbered close to 10,000. Others, such as Jews from the United States, Russia and Germany would soon arrive, as well as some 40,000 Irish fleeing famine in their homeland. Blacks escaping slavery in the USA soon followed, sowing the seeds of current day Toronto's multicultural diversity. As the population increased, so did the city's infrastructure. The University of Toronto opened its doors in 1843. Growth continued in spite of the Great Fires of 1849 and 1904. The new city included an extensive network of roads, railways, canals, shipping, and telegraph lines. In 1867, Canada was born, and Toronto became the capital of the newly created province of Ontario.

ART GALLERY OF ONTARIO	With a permanent collection of more than 73,000 works of art spanning more than 1000 years, the Art Gallery of Ontario is among the most distinguished art museums in North America. In 2002, the Gallery began an extraordinary chapter in its 109-year history when it launched the Transformation AGO expansion project. On November 14, 2008 the transformed AGO opened to public and critical acclaim with more than 68,000 people visiting the Gallery throughout its opening week. Designed by celebrated architect Frank Gehry as his first Canadian project in his childhood home of Toronto, the new AGO opened its doors to iconic architecture and more than 4,300 works of art in 110 galleries. As the imaginative centre of the city, the transformed AGO dramatically enriches visitors' experiences and provides new access to the full vibrancy of the art museum. The new AGO features 97,000 sq. ft. of new and renovated space, including a 47 per cent increase in art viewing space. The unprecedented growth of the AGO's permanent collection is a focal point of the Gallery – from the much-loved Group of Seven to the art of world cultures, from David Altmejd's monumental installation The Index to Peter Paul Rubens' masterpiece The Massacre of The Innocents, a highlight of the internationally acclaimed Thomson Collection of more than 2,000 works. Also, the AGO operates two additional services for the public. At 60 McCaul St., the AGO's Gallery School offers art education opportunities for all ages and skill levels taught by a dedicated group of teachers and artists. The AGO's Art Rental and Sales Gallery is located at 481 University Ave. and offers a wide selection of amazing work for sale and rent chosen from local galleries and suitable for all budgets.
